1. Purpose

This Employee Benefits Policy establishes the framework under which TechNova Solutions Pvt. Ltd. (“TechNova” or “the Company”) provides, administers, and communicates employee benefit programs. The policy is intended to help employees understand benefit eligibility, enrollment, usage, claims, responsibilities, and changes to benefit programs.

Benefits are provided in accordance with Company plans, insurer or provider terms, applicable law, and approved internal policies. Where a benefit plan document or applicable legal requirement conflicts with a general description in this policy, the governing plan terms or applicable requirement will prevail.

2. Scope

This policy applies to eligible employees of TechNova and, where expressly stated, eligible dependents or other covered persons.

Benefit eligibility may differ according to employment category, location, level, tenure, statutory requirements, plan rules, or other legitimate eligibility criteria.

3. Benefits Philosophy

- Provide meaningful support for employee wellbeing and financial security.
- Offer benefits that are aligned with business needs and the Company's compensation philosophy.
- Administer benefits consistently and transparently within applicable eligibility rules.
- Protect the confidentiality of employee benefit information.
- Review benefit programs periodically to maintain relevance and sustainability.

4. Benefit Categories

TechNova may provide a combination of statutory, Company-sponsored, insurance-based, and voluntary benefits. Programs may include:

- Medical and health insurance
- Accident and personal protection coverage
- Life insurance or group term coverage

- Retirement or provident-fund related benefits
- Wellness and employee assistance programs
- Paid leave and family-related benefits
- Flexible or remote-work support where applicable
- Learning and professional development benefits
- Travel and business expense benefits
- Employee discounts or recognition programs

5. Eligibility

Eligibility is determined by the applicable benefit plan and employment terms. Full-time employees may generally be eligible for the core Company-sponsored benefits described in this policy, subject to plan-specific rules.

Part-time, temporary, trainee, consultant, contractor, intern, or other non-standard workers may have different eligibility and should refer to their engagement terms and the relevant plan documentation.

6. Benefit Enrollment

Eligible employees must complete required enrollment or nomination processes within the period communicated by HR. Certain benefits may require selection during onboarding or a designated annual enrollment window.

- Employees are responsible for providing accurate personal and dependent information.
- Required declarations, identification documents, nominations, or forms must be submitted through approved channels.
- Failure to enroll within a required period may delay coverage or limit available choices.
- Enrollment does not override eligibility requirements.

7. Dependents

Where a benefit permits dependent coverage, eligible dependents must meet the definition contained in the relevant benefit plan.

Employees are responsible for maintaining accurate dependent information and promptly reporting changes such as marriage, divorce, birth, adoption, death, or loss of eligibility.

8. Medical and Health Insurance

Where TechNova sponsors group medical insurance, eligible employees may receive coverage under the Company's selected insurance program. Coverage, limits, waiting periods, network arrangements, exclusions, room or treatment limits, and claim procedures are governed by the applicable insurer and policy schedule.

8.1 Typical Coverage Administration

- Employees receive policy or membership information through approved HR or insurer channels.
- Cashless or direct-billing treatment may be available through participating providers where supported.
- Reimbursement claims must follow insurer documentation and submission requirements.
- Employees should verify network and pre-authorization requirements before planned treatment where applicable.
- Coverage for dependents is subject to the selected plan and eligibility rules.

9. Health Insurance Claims

Employees should submit claims promptly and provide complete supporting documentation. Typical documents may include bills, receipts, medical reports, prescriptions, discharge summaries, claim forms, and identity or policy information, depending on the claim.

The insurer or authorized claims administrator determines claim admissibility. HR may assist with administrative coordination but does not guarantee claim approval.

10. Pre-Authorization

Where the benefit plan requires prior authorization for hospitalization, procedures, or other services, employees should follow the prescribed authorization process before treatment whenever reasonably possible.

Emergency treatment should be handled according to the insurer's emergency claim and notification procedures.

11. Health Insurance Exclusions

Coverage is not unlimited. Exclusions, sub-limits, waiting periods, deductibles, co-payments, non-payable items, and other restrictions may apply.

Employees should review the current insurer policy wording and benefit schedule rather than relying solely on this policy for a determination of coverage.

12. Personal Accident Coverage

If provided under the Company's benefits program, personal accident coverage may provide benefits for qualifying accidental injury, disability, or death subject to the applicable policy terms.

Eligibility, covered events, benefit amounts, exclusions, and claim procedures are determined by the applicable insurance contract.

13. Life Insurance / Group Term Coverage

Where provided, group life or term insurance may provide a benefit to the nominated beneficiary upon a qualifying event, subject to policy conditions.

Employees should keep beneficiary and nomination information current.

14. Retirement and Statutory Benefits

Employees may receive statutory or retirement-related benefits applicable to their employment and location. Administration may include provident fund, gratuity, social security, or other legally required programs where applicable.

Statutory eligibility, contribution rates, vesting, taxation, and withdrawal rules are governed by applicable law and official program requirements and may change independently of this policy.

15. Wellness Programs

TechNova may provide wellness initiatives designed to support physical, mental, social, and financial wellbeing. Programs may include health awareness sessions, preventive-care activities, fitness initiatives, ergonomic guidance, or employee support resources.

Participation in voluntary wellness activities should not affect employment decisions unless participation is itself a defined job requirement or legal requirement.

16. Employee Assistance and Support

Where an employee assistance or support program is available, employees may access confidential services through the designated provider, subject to provider terms.

Employees should use official HR communications to identify current support resources and eligibility.

17. Paid Leave as a Benefit

Paid leave programs are governed primarily by the applicable Leave Policy and related statutory requirements. This policy recognizes paid leave as part of the overall employee benefits framework but does not replace the detailed leave rules.

18. Family and Life-Event Benefits

Depending on applicable plans and law, employees may have access to benefits associated with marriage, childbirth, adoption, bereavement, or other qualifying life events.

Employees should notify HR within the required period when a life event changes benefit eligibility or dependent status.

19. Learning and Development Benefits

Eligible employees may receive access to Company-sponsored learning, certification, conferences, training programs, or professional development resources.

Approval, reimbursement limits, service commitments, and eligible expenses may vary by program and department.

20. Professional Memberships

The Company may support selected professional memberships where the membership has a clear business or development purpose and receives required approval.

Employees must not commit the Company to membership fees or recurring expenses without authorization.

21. Employee Recognition and Perks

TechNova may operate recognition programs, employee events, discounts, or other workplace perks. Such programs may be changed, suspended, or discontinued based on business considerations and available budgets.

22. Benefit Costs and Employee Contributions

Some benefits may be fully Company-funded, while others may require an employee contribution, co-payment, deductible, or optional premium.

Any employee contribution will be communicated through the applicable enrollment or benefits communication.

23. Tax Treatment

Certain benefits may have tax implications depending on the employee's location, benefit structure, and applicable law. Employees are responsible for complying with their personal tax obligations. TechNova may report or withhold amounts where required.

24. Benefit Changes

The Company may modify benefit plans, providers, eligibility rules, contribution arrangements, or coverage levels based on business, legal, market, or provider considerations.

Where a material change affects employees, HR will communicate the change through an appropriate official channel.

25. Open Enrollment

Where annual enrollment applies, employees will receive information about available plans, deadlines, coverage options, and required actions.

- Employees should review coverage needs before making elections.
- Dependent information should be verified.

- Changes submitted during enrollment may become effective according to plan rules.
- Failure to complete required elections may result in continuation of default coverage or another outcome specified by the plan.

26. Qualifying Life Events

Some benefit plans permit changes outside the normal enrollment period following qualifying life events. Examples may include marriage, divorce, birth, adoption, death of a dependent, or loss of other coverage.

Employees must provide required evidence within the applicable notification window.

27. Benefit Documentation

Employees should retain relevant insurance cards, policy information, nomination records, claim references, receipts, and other benefit documents as appropriate.

Official HR or provider records are authoritative for current enrollment status.

28. Confidentiality and Privacy

Benefit information may contain personal, financial, medical, or dependent information. Access should be limited to authorized employees, HR personnel, insurers, administrators, and other parties with a legitimate business or legal need.

TechNova will handle benefit information in accordance with applicable privacy and information-security requirements.

29. Employee Responsibilities

- Complete enrollment and documentation accurately and on time.
- Keep personal, dependent, and beneficiary information current.
- Follow insurer and provider procedures.
- Submit claims with accurate supporting information.
- Safeguard insurance cards, credentials, and benefit documents.

- Avoid making unauthorized commitments about benefits.
- Support reasonable employee participation in required benefit processes.
- Protect confidential employee information.
- Escalate benefit-related issues to HR when appropriate.

32. Benefits During Leave

Continuation of benefits during paid or unpaid leave depends on the relevant benefit plan, employment terms, and applicable law.

Employees taking extended leave should contact HR to understand coverage continuation, employee contributions, and required actions.

33. Benefits During Remote Work

Approved remote or hybrid work does not by itself remove eligibility for standard benefits. However, certain benefits may have location-specific or provider-specific restrictions.

Employees working remotely should continue to comply with the applicable Work From Home & Hybrid Work Policy and benefit provider requirements.

34. Separation from Employment

Benefit eligibility generally ends or changes according to the applicable plan and the employee's separation date.

HR will communicate applicable continuation, conversion, claims, final contribution, nomination, or documentation requirements where relevant.

Employees should complete outstanding benefit-related actions before separation where practicable.

35. Benefit Fraud and Misuse

Employees must not submit false claims, alter documents, misrepresent eligibility, misuse another person's coverage, or otherwise attempt to obtain benefits improperly.

Suspected fraud or material misuse may be investigated and may result in corrective or disciplinary action and, where appropriate, referral to the relevant provider or authority.

36. Vendor and Provider Administration

TechNova may use insurers, third-party administrators, benefits platforms, healthcare networks, payroll providers, or other service providers to administer benefits.

Provider-specific procedures may be updated without requiring a full revision of this policy.

37. Exceptions

Exceptions to standard Company benefit processes require appropriate HR and management approval and must remain consistent with applicable law and the governing benefit plan.

An exception to an internal administrative process does not override insurer or statutory requirements.
